“ Aaron was such a good neighbor and friend. I loved the drama he would inject into every story. He once told me he liked walking by my house at night because we were sitting at the dinner table, looking like a Norman Rockwell magazine cover. He also did funny things. Though this is serious, it still makes me laugh. Sick of the neighbors' outside spotlight shining into his window, he went outside and threw a towel over it, which promptly caught on fire . Caused quite a hullabloo. .

“ I was privileged to meet Aaron while working at the Golden Apple many years ago. Although he did not "suffer fools " easily, he had a huge heart, a kindness for the underdogs, the well intentioned, & a laugh that i loved to hear. My condolences to you all for finding peace, & comfort in knowing how truly appreciated your brother & friend was & still is.....

“ In years past we shared some grand and lively moments with Aaron in our trek to Boston. Before that he suddenly sprung into my life fresh from London. He was the one who initiated me at my first time over to Paul Rubinfeld's house, by surprising me with a sudden dunk in the moat--a tradition for all those new to those lively soirees. Initially in Boston, things hadn't worked out where we first lived, and we spent a short time in an abandoned factory, in some God forsaken borough, where he would get up and cheerfully put on his tux amid the soot, to go to the Harvard Club as a maitre'd and then helped me with a job there as well. Always alive with energy, and always fun to be around, he will be missed!
