“ Harvey was our next door neighbor for around 20 years. We managed to communicate although I had trouble understanding him sometimes and I am sure he had some trouble understanding the partially deaf English bloke next door, Daily, Harvey used to go to his dock and all of his turtle friends would come up for feeding. I was lucky enough to join him sometimes where we would sit and gripe about what was happening in the world at that particular moment and what he had found on the beach that morning or talk about how long we both had left. Many a tree we both manhandled out from our pond to get it cut up for yard waste. Harvey was generous with his time and always helpful. We couldn't ask for a better neighbor. He was our neighbor and our good friend. We will miss you Harvey.

“ Dearest Artus,

I'm so sorry for your loss. What a true friend Harvey was to me. He taught me everything there is to know about metal detecting and shared some crazy stories! It was also a pleasure working along side of him. He took a pride in his work that you just don't see very often. Especially his work at the Baltimore museum of Industry. It was incredible that one man accomplished all that! Him and my dad are now sharing stories with KiKi and Hody! God rest his soul!

“ Harvey was helping me with my erosion wall and I said to him how sorry I was that I didn't always understand him. He put his finger on his stoma and said " I hate this F&%$#@ thing". A few days later and without realizing it I started putting my finger on my throat and started talking like him. We laughed about that forever. I absolutely loved Harvey more than my own brothers. He was a caring, loving and wonderful man. There is no doubt in my mind he is in heaven speaking normally and without any pain. God Bless .

“ In 1996 my granddaughter Cassandra was battling cancer as a 9 month old. Harvey was doing masonry work in a Baltimore suburb for a famous children's author Kevin O'Malley. Telling Cassie's story to the author, he obtained a signed book of his "The Box" for our Cassie. Happy ending, Cassie is 26 & engaged to a great guy. Jow thoughtful of Harvey to take the time & make the effort on her behalf! Semper Fi!
