“ I sure do miss my phone conversations with Sam. Most of the time they were normal “keep in touch” type phone calls, but occasionally we would find ourselves still on the phone after an hour or more. We talked about everything and solved most of the world’s problems, if only the right people would listen to our suggestions. I suppose it was like two old friends sitting on the porch shooting the breeze, we just did it over the phone. I met Sam when the security company he was working for merged with the security company I was working for. We worked a lot of jobs together over the years. When we came across a logistical or mechanical challenge, Sam could figure it out. He would think about the situation for 15 or 20 minutes and then come up with a sketch and a parts list; problem solved. We also had a lot of fun at work and definitely did some damage when we went to a buffet restaurant for lunch.

Sam was a genuine friend who would tell it like it is because that’s what would help you the most. He was always willing to come over and help out when my home projects got a little overwhelming. I never had to doubt his sincerity or deep down concern for the well-being of me and my family. I will miss him and I hope to see him in heaven someday so I can say, “I told you this was real.”
